Name:

Day One Polite Eating Around the World

Part 1: Silent read

How is polite eating different around the world? Read silently.

Brandon Green works as a server at Applebee's. People from all over the world eat there. It's close to tourist spots in Washington, D.C. He gets to see eating styles from around the world.

Brandon was shocked to see how tourists from Germany eat hamburgers. They cut the burger up with a knife and fork. Then they spear each bite with a fork.

French tourists ask for forks and knives to eat pizza. They cut the pizza into little bites. "If you're from these places, it's different. You never touch the food with your hands," Brandon says. "They always want forks and knives."

Close to Applebee's, there's a restaurant called Sheba. Sheba serves East African food. At Sheba, people eat food with their hands. Meals are served with a big piece of bread. You tear off a corner and use it to scoop up your food.

Some Americans at Applebee's finish all their food. But many people leave food on their plates. This is impolite in other countries. If you're eating with people from Japan, you try to finish every bite of your food. Unfinished food shows you didn't like the meal. It's an insult to your hosts. But people from Cambodia feel that finishing every bite is rude. If you don't leave food behind, it tells your hosts they didn't give you enough to eat.

After finishing eating, many Americans try to sit quietly. But in Saudi Arabia, a loud burp can be a compliment. It shows you really enjoyed the meal!

Passage 1 p. 5

// one minute

Part 2: First timed read

WPM ____

Brandon Green works as a server at Applebee's. People from all over the world eat there. It's close to tourist spots in Washington, D.C. He gets to see eating styles from around the world.

Brandon was shocked to see how tourists from Germany eat hamburgers. They cut the burger up with a knife and fork. Then they spear each bite with a fork.	48 63
French tourists ask for forks and knives to eat pizza. They cut the pizza into little bites. "If you're from these places, it's different. You never touch the food with your hands," Brandon says. "They always want forks and knives."	79 94 103
Close to Applebee's, there's a restaurant called Sheba. Sheba serves East African food. At Sheba, people eat food with their hands. Meals are served with a big piece of bread. You tear off a corner and use it to scoop up your food.	115 132 146
Some Americans at Applebee's finish all their food. But many people leave food on their plates. This is impolite in other countries. If you're eating with people from Japan, you try to finish every bite of your food. Unfinished food shows you didn't like the meal. It's an insult to your hosts. But people from Cambodia feel that finishing every bite is rude. If you don't leave food behind, it tells your hosts they didn't give you enough to eat.	160 174 189 204 220 226
After finishing eating, many Americans try to sit quietly. But in Saudi Arabia, a loud burp can be a compliment. It shows you really enjoyed the meal!	241 253

Part 3: Comprehension and discussion

How is polite eating different for people from Germany and France?

Where in the world do people try to finish everything on their plates?

© () () = SERP Institute, 2014-2020

Day One Polite Eating Around the World

Part 4: Phrase-cued reading

- Read the passage out loud in phrases to your partner.
- → Pause at each / mark for a phrase.
- → Also pause at each // mark that shows the end of a sentence.

Brandon Green works as a server at Applebee's. // People from all over the world / eat there. // It's close to tourist spots / in Washington, DC. // He gets to see eating styles / from around the world. //

Brandon was shocked / to see how tourists from Germany / eat hamburgers. // They cut the burger up / with a knife and fork. // Then they spear each bite / with a fork. //

French tourists ask for forks and knives / to eat pizza. // They cut the pizza into little bites. // "If you're from these places, / it's different. // You never touch the food / with your hands," / Brandon says. // "They always want forks and knives." //

Close to Applebee's, / there's a restaurant called Sheba. // Sheba serves East African food. // At Sheba, / people eat food with their hands. // Meals are served with a big piece of bread. // You tear off a corner / and use it to scoop up your food. //

Some Americans at Applebee's / finish all their food. // But many people leave food on their plates. // This is impolite in other countries. // If you're eating with people from Japan, / you try to finish every bite of your food. // Unfinished food / shows you didn't like the meal. // It's an insult to your hosts. // But people from Cambodia / feel that finishing every bite is rude. // If you don't leave food behind, / it tells your hosts / they didn't give you enough to eat. //

After finishing eating, / many Americans try to sit quietly. // But in Saudi Arabia, / a loud burp can be a compliment. // It shows you really enjoyed the meal! //

☐ I read the passage in phrases out loud to my partner.

Passage 1 p. 7