

And . . . But . . .

Language for comparing and contrasting

Turn your diagram into a piece of writing about yourself and your partner.

Start by looking at the different topics on the interview: music, movies, sports, and things that annoy you. For each topic, write a sentence.

Use the word “and” if you agree about that topic or are the same:

My partner is 14, and I am 14.

Use the word “but” if you don’t feel the same about the topic:

My partner likes hip-hop, but I like country.

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

Check your work! Check off each topic from the interview that you wrote about:

- |                                      |                                     |                                 |  |
|--------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|---------------------------------|--|
| <input type="checkbox"/> name        | <input type="checkbox"/> town       | <input type="checkbox"/> food   | <input type="checkbox"/> annoying things |
| <input type="checkbox"/> age         | <input type="checkbox"/> activities | <input type="checkbox"/> movies | <input type="checkbox"/> dreams          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> nationality | <input type="checkbox"/> music      | <input type="checkbox"/> sports |  |