Passage 10

// one minute

WPM

Gaby Pacheco was a top student at her Florida high school. She was also undocumented. Gaby came from Ecuador to the U.S. with her family. Growing up, she began to realize what it meant to be undocumented, an immigrant without legal papers. When Gaby turned 16, she applied for a driving permit. Because of her 55 69 status, Gaby was turned away. Being deported was a constant worry. She saw her dreams slipping away. She decided to channel her anger into a fight for her future. 84 97 Many undocumented immigrants keep their status a secret. They are afraid to call the police when they need help. They expect that authorities will not help them 111 unless they have the proper papers. They live in fear that officials will identify 125 and detain them. 128 Then came the Dreamers movement. Young immigrants began speaking out, telling 139 the world about their status. At rallies, they carried signs that said, "Undocumented 152 and Unafraid." They spoke about their dreams of growing up American. The 164 dreamers' stories added a positive, personal tone to the immigration debate. 175 189 Gaby and some friends participated in a protest called the Trail of Dreams. They walked from their home in Miami all the way to Washington D.C. to protest for 204 immigration reform. After four months of walking, they arrived in the capitol. Along 217 the way, they used Facebook and Twitter to share their journey with the world. Gaby 232 said, "We want to show our love and all our passion and our desire to stay in the country." 251 Part 3: Comprehension and discussion Some adult immigrants were angry when the Dreamers spoke out. They believed that rallies would not help change the rules. They thought the Dreamers should keep quiet about their personal stories. What do you think? From what you have read, did speaking out make any difference? Share your ideas with your partner. We did this. Passage 10 p. 54 ⓒ 🛊 🔇 😑 SERP Institute, 2014-2020 STARI Unit 3.2 • Fluency C
